At noon, Blankenhorn, who had been present at the morning meeting, came to see me and we rehashed the earlier proceedings.

Red Dowling, Lloyd Steere and I lunched with Jim Conant, then returned to the office. During the course of the day we talked six times to Paris, once to Foster Dulles in Washington, and hours to each other.

At six o'clock I had another go with Blankenhorn.

At seven I settled down at Red's with an Old Fashioned, at eight dined with Dowling and his charming wife, and at 9:30 was on the train to Paris, feeling every day of fifty-six.
